Japanese GK figures originated in the 1980s when fans of anime and manga began to create their own models, often from resin or plastic, which required assembly and painting. This hobby quickly gained popularity, and today it represents a vibrant subculture within the collectibles community. What sets GK figures apart is their attention to detail and the creative freedom they provide to both manufacturers and collectors. Many of these figures are limited editions or one-of-a-kind pieces, enhancing their desirability among fans. Collectors appreciate the craftsmanship involved, as each figure often reflects the personality and essence of the character it portrays.
